He has a job and is a volunteer too!

Last winter we told you about Hank and Rachel. Hank lost his job and they were struggling to get by. In fact, Hank and Rachel were the first client guests at the new Amelia Choice Food Pantry.

Hank was so thankful that he has volunteered at IPM while he continued to look for employment.

Amazingly, he gave us the good news that he was hired and starts a new job on March 13th!

We are always humbled and thankful that “Small acts of generosity can grow into something far beyond what you could imagine.” -Ephesians 3:20.

Hank’s hope and giving what he could through volunteering is a true example of this verse. Thanks to Hank and Susan for sharing their story and their journey with IPM. God’s grace in action!

Our Scripps Howard Intern, Megan, Shares Her First Day at IPM

As I am sure most of you are aware, it does not take long to figure out how special, unique and nurturing the environment at Inter Parish Ministry is.

During my first ever shift as a food pantry volunteer, I met a client named Paula . We introduced ourselves and got straight into the shopping. I walked alongside her, pushing the shopping cart as she debated over choosing black or pinto beans, peaches or pear slices, corn or peas.

As I shared some cooking tips with her (bake your chick peas in the oven, they taste like French fries!) she told me about her divorce. She told me that since she and her husband had split up, she wasn't able to keep up with her car, food and rent payments. For the first time in her life, she had borrowed money from her daughter.

I could not relate to her struggles and I was not sure what words of comfort, advice, or guidance I should give. But at the end of her visit to IPM, after we had finished putting the food items into her car, Paula turned to me and expressed deep gratitude for my kindness. She told me that she had never had to ask for food before, but "that people like me make it easier to come ask for help."

Her comment deeply touched me. I did not need to offer advice to her, I just needed to be a listening ear and a kind face. It is difficult to convey in writing the gratefulness in Paula's voice as she told me how nice of me it was to listen to her talk. But that gratitude was there. Every time I called her by name, a smile flitted across her face.

I have not been working at IPM for very long at all, especially compared to so many of the selfless volunteers who come back year after year to give their time to this special community. But I have spent enough time here to see that every client expresses the same gratitude that Paula did to me. And these clients are not just grateful for the extra food and clothes. They are grateful for the dignity, respect and love that IPM offers them.

At IPM, connection is what is important. Nobody believes they are better than someone else. Everybody is here to support one another. This is obvious when people who used to get food and clothing from IPM come back, but as volunteers. They want to give back to the organization that did so much for them during the dire times in their lives.

IPM is a truly special place where everyone who walks through the door is met with acceptance, no questions asked. God can be seen in the faces of each person in this community built on love.

Megan is a senior at Xavier who will graduate in May.

We are privileged to have her two days a week thanks to

The Scripps Howard Foundation.
